Indore institute of Law organised guest lecture with the association of ignited mind club on the differentiation between AI art and Intellectual Property Rights (IPR) presents a nuanced perspective that requires careful consideration of legal frameworks and the evolving nature of artificial intelligence. AI-generated art poses unique challenges in terms of authorship, ownership, and protection under existing intellectual property laws. From an Indian law prospects, copyright law typically grants protection to the creators of original works. However, when it comes to AI-generated art, determining authorship becomes complex. Indian copyright law attributes authorship to human creators, raising questions about the eligibility of AI systems for copyright protection. The absence of explicit provisions addressing AI-generated works necessitates a thoughtful examination of legal principles to adapt to technological advancements.
